Trans-Tasman Travel Bubble Confirmed

New Zealand and Australia will finally have a two-way, quarantine-free travel bubble operating from 19 April 2021. New Zealand's Prime Minister Jacinda Ardern confirmed the highly anticipated news on Tuesday afternoon, stating that while reciprocal travel would be a major boost for both nations, specific COVID protocols would still apply to travellers while the threat of the virus remains.

There is still a cautionary note with the bubble to operate on a "continue, pause or suspend" contingency basis, depending on active COVID cases, rates of community spread etc. The news was received positively by both Qantas and Air New Zealand, with both airlines releasing revised frequencies for travel between our two countries.
